

AN AFFAIR TWO OCEAN PASS

"Throw a hitch on that pack and let's get started, let's get out of these mosquitoes," said Carolyn. "I'm being fairly eaten alive."

"Yes, let's go," pleaded Alice. "It's already half past three."

"Well, I'm ready," declared Will. "It's a good three hours' ride yet to where we ought to camp in Two Ocean Pass."

Will threw a shovelful of dirt upon their tiny fire, pushed the spade into its place on the pack saddle, set the kettle in the crotch, tossed on the blankets and folded the canvas tepee to act as a cover over all. Then, with expert swiftness, made them secure with a larlat in a diamond hitch. Buhul, the big black pack horse, wheezed, protestingly, but ambled off up the fatal trail at something faster than his usual gait, for he was as eager as they to be rid of the insect pests. Carolyn and Alice were already on their nervous camp ponies, and contrary to his custom, Will leaped into the saddle without examining straps and buckles to see that they were correct.

It had been the shortest of halts to "boil the kettle." They had wasted four good hours in getting across the half mile of willow swamp, beaver dams and bog holes that mark the junction of the Thoroughbred and the Upper Yellowstone River. The Howard family were spending the summer in camp on the north forty miles south; and Carolyn and Alice, both just graduated from college, had carried out their plan to do a three weeks' horseback tour of Yellowstone Park. The rest of the party, having already seen the park, were better content with the comfort of a settled camp; so only Will, two years the girls' senior, had come on the tour. They had had a glorious three weeks, and now were making a short cut back to Buffalo Fork and the Brooks Lake country through the wilds of the Upper Yellowstone and the great, forested, remote and unvisited, Two Ocean Pass. This was the end of their second day from the traveled road at Yellowstone Lake, and the going along the elk trails, blocked with fallen timber and occasionally marked with blazes, had been much more difficult than they had anticipated. Moreover, the mosquitoes and the marshy stretches, sheltered from the usual mountain breezes, had been all but intolerable.

That they had been allowed to leave the park at all in this unusual way was owing solely to the fact that Will was a lieutenant in the park commandant's regiment in France. Col. Trowbridge had waived the irregularity of their leaving by the unapproved route as a favor to his former mascot officer, and the girls knew how to get through the toughest going. Howard, the guide over the telephone in answer to Will's request, "I remember distinctly that but you won't find it easy getting across Thoroughbred beaver swamp. Be careful there and remember that you have two precious charges."

Now they were across, and at a brisk pace the three went on their trail, which followed the bank of the stream, now scarcely more than a brook. Gradually the going became easier, and presently they more open places with a better sweep of air. The grass grew tall; the ground beneath their feet was spongy, and signs of wild life were abundant.

"That looks like a horse trail," said Alice, "down there by the water," said Alice, pointing.

"For a closer inspection Will rode down the bank obligingly. 'It is,' he called; 'a fresh one going in our direction.'"

"No, it comes up and crosses ours, leading off into the woods," said Carolyn. "See where it comes up the bank. I wonder who it is."

"Ranger probably," replied Will. "The horse is shod, anyway."

"Why doesn't he go on the trail?" asked Carolyn, who protested to dislike puzzles and was always making them.

"Perhaps he is hunting," suggested the practical Alice.

"But I don't like people sneaking round," said Carolyn decidedly. "Here we are, fifty miles away from anyone, and I actually feel as if I'm being followed by a man. Do you suppose he is young and handsome?"

Will laughed. "I don't get excited, sis; we aren't likely to meet him. We shan't if he keeps going in that direction and we go in this."

But an hour later they did meet the man, or thought it was, coming at a quick canter toward them. He proved to be a ranger armed a big, powerful horse that showed signs of having been ridden long and hard. He drew up and dismounted. "I'm looking for a man, maybe two," he announced shortly. "Where are you going, and where did you come from?" They told him.

"I reckon you're all right," he said. "Have you met anyone since you left Yellowstone Lake?"

"No," said Will. "We saw horse tracks five or six miles back. They came out of the creek, crossed ours and went into the woods."

"I'll have a look at them. There was a holdup in the park yesterday afternoon—two big horses were robbed and a driver winged in the arm for good measure. It wasn't far from Yellowstone Lake. I don't think this is one of the likely ways for the fellow to make his getaway. My stand is over on Buffalo Fork. I'll be getting to have a look at those tracks."

He swung again into his saddle and touched his hat. "There is a thousand dollars up for his capture," he remarked, smiling. "Perhaps you girls would like to know it."

He glanced half shyly at Carolyn, and a touch of color mounted into his face. "A thousand dollars isn't a bad stake in this man's country," he added. Then he was gone down the trail.

"Well, he was young, and he was handsome," said Carolyn thoughtfully. "I hope he doesn't get shot."

"Yes, but I liked the way he favored his horse," said the always practical Alice. "He dismounted and smoothed the blanket while he was talking."

"And a businesslike little gun on his hip," interpreted Will tersely. "I don't like this highwayman—large idea. Let's be going."

As they dismounted that evening at the end of the long meadow from which water flows both to the Atlantic and to the Pacific the sun was nearing the rim of the majestic Teos, tinting their snow-capped summits with delicate pink. Carolyn gazed ecstatically at the view. "It's a fine moment," she thought of firewood and supper. "I'll gather some wood, Carolyn," she said. "If you will get out the flour and mix a batter."

"I think I'll pick the horses to-night instead of hobnobbing them," announced Will. "There's good feed back there beyond the brow of the meadow. We'll have to make a quick start in the morning and not catch horses a mile or two over meadow."

Alice soon had a fire kindled and had fetched a pail of water. Carolyn with over a dozen cakes in the air, set on the campfire and stirred the batter. "Let's get the horses first," advised Alice.

"I'm going to see what is keeping him," said Carolyn. "I'll be back in a minute."

They heard a step in the direction of the knoll. For a moment they saw three shadows approaching them. "I'll be back in a minute," said Alice. "Keep still till I get there."

Both girls jumped, but as they observed. With a shudder they turned the evil, coarse face of the man, and saw that he was not the man coming near her. Her gaze fastened on his heavy, bloodshot eyes, which burned daily. She was afraid and knew that he had reason to be. "I'm going to see what is keeping him," said Carolyn. "I'll be back in a minute."

Turning about, then, the man stood staring at Carolyn. "I'm going to see what is keeping him," said Carolyn. "I'll be back in a minute."

"I'm going to see what is keeping him," said Carolyn. "I'll be back in a minute."

RED DEER DRAMATIC CLUB

of the absurdity of the situation. This was an excellent piece of work on which we congratulate Miss Ebert.

Miss Irving had a singularly charming part to play, and did it well. Possibly her voice was not so strong, but we are informed by those who sat right at the back of the hall that it was heard quite clearly. We think that the difficulty of being heard was not a problem in this case—mission was well met here. Miss Ebert, as Miss Irving's partner in profitable mischief, looked her part well, unless perhaps a very particular critic might say that both she and Miss Irving suffered from the same fault, that the theatrical managers of the club were too refined. Miss Smith's voice and manner—her delivery—were just what was wanted for her part. Miss McDuff, as Gwen, had the longest and most prominent part of the ladies, but it is a slightly colourless part. Beyond looking very pretty and loving (and the privilege of old age enables us to tell this young lady that she did look both) Gwen had nothing very striking to do. However, she did it with faultless memory, and if we are to make any suggestion, it is to have her occasionally speak to her head turned away from the audience. Possibly her colleagues were as much hams for this as she was, for not all of them remembered the desirability of keeping well to the front of the stage, while Miss McDuff did so throughout. This is a little point of team work which experience will easily correct. Miss Gertrude Smith, as Ethel, also had a part without great opportunities in it. She took it simply and naturally as it came to her. It is perhaps none too easy for amateurs to take such a part without trying to force it. We suggest to Miss Gertrude Smith that her really beautiful voice should be more effectively disguised to justify Bob Bennett in his "awful" about it.

Of the men's parts that of Bob Bennett is naturally the most important. Mr. Bennett was really good in it. He has an excellent command of expression and put plenty of acting into his part, and stayed well to the front of the stage, while his scenes with Gwen had a heartiness about them which was quite understandable. As E. M. Raitson, a broker of doubtful principles and 25 years of married life, H. G. Scott did not look the part. His hair, grey to begin with, seemed to assume a more youthful tint as the evening went on, and there was a skittishness about him which accorded more with 25 than 50. However, when he was availing himself of the telephone, he seemed to be enjoying himself in an almost customary fashion. We shall tell him so when we see him next, and then run for safety. It took some of the audience a little time to recognize Mr. McDuff as Van Dusen, a rather objectionable man-about-town. His go-up was excellent, and there was a most uncharacteristic glow about his remarks. In fact we think his statement about the minister telling his congregation that they were all going to heaven was the hit of the evening. Mr. Olsen, as Dick Donnelly, was a good contrast, and fell to Van Dusen. His somewhat hesitant mode of speech, real or assumed, sounded well, and there was something very attractive in the boyish smile of mischief with which he intruded on the tender love scenes of Bob and Gwen.

We consider that W. F. Harris, as Bishop Doran, deserves a special word of praise. His make-up was not good, but his slow, precise enunciation was excellent, and we much enjoyed the expansive smile that slowly broadened over his face on occasion. If in the early part of the third act there were any hints that he and his fellows were for the moment a little astray from the beaten track, they were improving to cover their lapses, the hints were not very strong, and the result was perhaps as amusing as if there had not been any hesitation. As the small part of the butler C. F. Carwell looked just like a butler, he might consider this a times continued had in Canada.

The staging of the play was quite creditable in view of the limitations of the scenery and the stage-room available. In particular the portrait of George Washington and the grandfather clock were very good. We understand they were the unpaid work of W. F. Harris and very clever work it was.

We were glad to see so large an audience and so kindly a one. The getting up of a play by amateurs means a good deal of rather thankless work, and where it is possible to give them a sympathetic hearing, it is deserved. In this case the audience seemed to enjoy themselves heartily, and by their enjoyment put heart into the players. There is no need to indulge in undue praise of the performance, in which experts and professionals could no doubt find plenty of faults, but it was a distinctly creditable effort, and we trust that the Club will hold together and give other productions later on. Every intelligent local activity is good, and with encouragement and perseverance there is no reason why Red Deer should not achieve a modest name in this respect, and its citizens have an occasional evening of very harmless enjoyment.

The Dramatic Club have asked us to make public acknowledgment of their thanks to the Rotary Club, and other local organizations for their kindly hearing given so far. The Rotary Club at some of their meetings to avoid clashing with the performance.

HAS HARD WORDS FOR THE GERMANS

Ottawa, April 27.—Senator Dandurand, government leader, speaking in the senate yesterday, declared that Germany had deliberately depreciated her currency to avoid reparations and could not expect outside help until her currency was placed on a sound basis.

Germany had broken faith in the past and would in the future, he said, believing the allies to be divided and that she could afford to continue to act with insincerity and arrogance. It was a great regret that a knockout blow had not been given that country before the armistice. She must be made to admit that she is lost, and then it is possible she may redeem herself. She must wipe out her fake currency and start afresh by taking gold stored away in that country and putting it in circulation.

Senator Dandurand believed that Lloyd George was largely responsible for the German attitude.

The Salvation Army wishes to announce that the annual sale of Self-Denial will be from May 6 to 13 inclusive. The young people's force will be open from 10 to 12 o'clock, that time collectors will call on everyone for their contribution. Before that time, should any of you can about the Army, the S. D. Fund, and where the money goes, let will be given to those who ask. You should secure, too, the special S. D. Fund, and where the money goes, let will be given to those who ask. You should secure, too, the special S. D. Fund, and where the money goes, let will be given to those who ask.

THE TRAIL

We are just in receipt of the sixth number of "The Trail," a small magazine published by the Alumni Association of the University of Alberta. It is a very neat appearing number and contains very entertaining articles as well as a list of gossip for the graduates. Special mention might be made of the article "I remember," by one Sandy Caldwell, which is a very interesting account of that are and will probably remain unknown to our readers, but his closing words are as follows: "During 1922 I have formed a few convictions, to wit:

- (1) The best book I read in connection with the University of Alberta during that year was "Lavenex."
- (2) There are no brains left on the ordinary Alberta country fairway.
- (3) If Henry Ford in the reincarnation of King Tutankhamun he is playing true to form in one respect, namely that like his royal self he will be remembered for his bad deeds rather than his good ones.
- (4) The greater part of human effort is futile. (This last after watching the young men vainly endeavoring to hit the first one and the curve of the talented "Dodger" Lewis, who plays of Calgary, and after seeing the fass made by Andrew Gump when he thought he had swallowed bichloride of mercury.)

PENSIONS AND LAW

At the request of some of our readers, we publish the following from the Calgary Herald of Friday last:

"Canadian national honor is challenged by the report of the Royal Commission on Pensions and the pensioners' decision to make effective their obvious implications of the report, which were that the Pensions Act had been administered in a way which the parliament and the people of Canada never intended it to be. The commission was to be changed so that justice be done the disabled pensioners and their dependents, and the dependents of those who lie beneath alien skies.

There are no signs that that attitude will be changed. Col. J. Thompson, chairman of the Pensions Board, in his evidence before the Royal Commission, said: "It is not a question of sympathy or lack of sympathy. It is entirely statutory, and while the statute remains as it is, the law will be administered as I find it and as we interpret it." The people of Canada will undoubtedly feel that it is a question of sympathy. When the welfare of the war-wounded men and their families is under discussion, they want the statute to be interpreted as sympathetically as is compatible with justice. Economy, bordering on niggardliness should not place in interpreting the pensions law. And the fact that the law has to be interpreted seems to make ineffectual the claim that it is "entirely statutory." In the case of a case had nothing to do with its treatment.

Cases of hardship and injustice to the dependents are returned disabled men and their widows and families continue to crop up. There are still hundreds of cases where the pensioners have been harshly treated. While these claims remain undischarged, the national honor is under reproach. To remedy this condition of affairs, the Pensions Act must be revised so that it will meet the legitimate needs of those it is intended to protect. The Pension Board's outlook must be so adjusted that it is able to view the problem as one not purely of law but one of common justice. Failing this, parliament might be justified in placing men on the board who have the necessary outlook."

W.C.T.U. NOTES

The W.C.T.U. held their monthly meeting in the hall of the Presbyterian Church on Wednesday afternoon, April 25th. The President, through illness, being unable to attend, the first vice-president occupied the chair. Mrs. McVicar, Evangelistic Supervisor, having charge of the devotional exercises, read part of the third chapter of Kings 1.

The change of the regular day of meeting, due to the District Convention which was held at Lacombe April 25 and 26, gave any of the members who wished to attend a chance to do so along with the appointed delegates. Mrs. Pye, Mrs. Houston, Mrs. Banner, Mrs. Blythe, and Mrs. Bannerman.

After the business was dispensed with, a chapter from a book called "The Bible and the Modern World," written by Janie Canuck, or Judge Emily Murphy, dealing with the drug traffic, was read. Meeting closed with Missah Benediction.

We are glad to report that Mrs. F. W. Gies is progressing favorably.

ELECTORS WILL DECIDE LIQUOR QUESTION NEXT NOVEMBER 5TH

Edmonton, April 27.—Alberta electors will decide on Monday, November 5, what form of liquor legislation shall be enacted in the province for the three years ending in 1931. Premier Greenfield and his colleagues in the government cabinet decided yesterday on the above date as most advisable for the holding of the referendum, which was authorized by the legislature last week.

Although it was at first thought expedient to have the vote on the cabinet opinion changed during the last two or three days, and it was apparently too judicious to hold the balloting until after harvest and threshing in the province. It is understood that both the prohibition and the moderation forces were favorable to a prolonged campaign rather than a short and strenuous one, as would have been inevitable had the vote been taken in July, only a short time after farmers usually finish with their seedling.

Possible Session

Another element militating against the July vote was that of the prospect of several months' uncertainty in the event of any of three forms of government control being chosen between the electoral decision and the next regular session of the legislature to ratify any change in the law which might be necessary.

The only way to have circumvented this state of affairs would have been by means of a special session as soon after the vote as possible, an event which would undoubtedly have involved with harvest operations.

Here and There

Nova Scotia has adopted the "drive to the right" rule of the road, the bill providing the change having received the assent of the administrator of the province.

The year 1922 was a banner year for Montreal in the number and tonnage of ships which came to the port, a total of 9,983 ships of 13,000 tons arriving, as compared with 5,641 ships of 9,054,000 tons in 1921.

Canada led the world in 1922 in the export of raw furs to the United States. The total fur catch for that year was over 4,000,000 pelts, valued at $16,000,000. While the general price of furs shows a downward trend, the total catch shows a remarkable increase.

Four of the Canadian Pacific "Empress" liners, the Britain, the France, the Scotland and the India are to load grain at Quebec during the 1923 season, and new berths have been provided for these vessels near the grain conveyors, at a cost of $400,000.

When she was alighting from a street car in Vancouver, Mrs. Rose McLaren received injuries which prevented her from concentrating and temporarily did away with her ear-ner as a spiritualist or psychical reader. She was awarded $1,250 against the railway company.

The addition of the 17,000-ton "Montaurier" to the Canadian Pacific "Mono Class" fleet marks an important development. Not only is she the largest one-class ship built in Canada, but she is the largest in her class on the Atlantic. Her length is 615 feet and breadth 88 feet. Because of her size she will sail to and from Quebec.

Approximately 8,000 tons of silver ore are waiting shipment from the Hill, Yukon, mine. This quantity represents the winter haul. Another 2,000 tons may be moved before the end of the season. The shipments ten thousand tons for 1923. Such an output is worth about $2,000,000, high grade ore running from $200 to $300 per ton.

"The greatest feat of steam transportation to my knowledge," said C. E. Stockill, of the Canadian Pacific Railway, recently, "was the movement of the grain crop of 1922." From Sept. 1 to Nov. 31, a period of 91 days, the Canadian Pacific Railway loaded and shipped an average of 1,265 cars per day. This required the dispatching of a train every 45 minutes during that entire period, carrying more than 1,000,000 bushels daily. This movement exceeded even that of the bumper crop year of 1915.

One of the many instances of the splendid work carried out at the Liverpool docks is afforded by the Canadian Pacific liner "Metagama." On a recent arrival at that port she started the discharge of her cargo and coaling at 6 o'clock in the morning. Allowing for the usual dinner hour, she took on board in her side bunkers 1,000 tons of coal, which was completed by 2:45 the same afternoon. At the same time she discharged 1,700 tons of cargo, the greater part of which consisted of package freight, this operation being completed by 7:15 the same evening.

THE KISS OF A PRINCE

This story about the Prince of Wales is worth retelling. It is not a long story. The other day he visited a hospital where thirty-six hopelessly disabled war veterans spent their days—and nights. He chatted with twenty-nine of the men a while. Then he asked to see the other seven. Hospital attendants said he had better not see them; they were not nice to look upon. But the Prince insisted and saw and talked with six more veterans.

"Then—where was the seventh man? No one save physicians and nurses was permitted to see the seventh man. No? But the Prince would see him, he said. He was taken to the seventh man's room. Let us quote the cable story:

"He walked firmly to the bedside, but turned very pale when he saw the afflicted veteran. For a few moments he stood with bowed head. Then he slowly stooped down and kissed the shattered face."

That is the story. We shall not try to point a moral in it. We have nothing to say about it. Nothing that is except that we should like to shake hands with the Prince of Wales.

FARMER OF LACOMBE DISTRICT A SUICIDE

Arthur Fields Shoots Himself While Insane, Coroner's Verdict.

Arthur Eugene Fields, a farmer living at Lockhart, a few miles west of Lacombe, committed suicide at 11 o'clock, Friday morning. The report of Dr. E. M. Sharpe, coroner, in part, is as follows:

"From the statements of Mr. and Mrs. Garries, relatives of the deceased, and Dr. E. M. Sharpe, of Marmora, and the examination of the body, and the room in which it lay, I am of the opinion that Arthur Eugene Fields came to his death at his home by suicide, by shooting himself in the head with a Winchester .30-30 rifle, during an attack of delirium or insanity, the after results of influenza, complicated by pneumonia, and that an inquest is not necessary."

Deceased man was a son-in-law of G. E. Garries, of Bentley, Alberta, 30 years of age. He came to Alberta twelve years ago from Wisconsin, U.S.A. He leaves a wife and two young children to mourn his loss.

RUHR RAILWAYS HEAVILY BOMBED

Duesseldorf, April 27.—Five separate bomb explosions on the Ruhr railways during the night cut railway, telegraph and telephone communications and temporarily disorganized traffic. French headquarters said the explosions had caused the most serious damage since the beginning of the occupation.

During the confusion, the Germans made a series of efforts to run the customs barrier into interior Germany, but large quantities of goods which the Germans were trying to get through were seized by the French.

The explosions tore up sections of track and blew down the wires along side in each instance. In one case, near Bonn, a French troop train, heavily loaded, had a narrow escape. The explosions cut the line from the eastern Ruhr to Duesseldorf, which is much used for troop movements and the carriage of supplies. Four other lines were cut in the vicinity of Hattingen.

ROCKY MOUNT'N HOUSE

(Too late for last week)

Main Street is building up again after all the fires. Sidewalks have been completed on both sides. The Wilson building, which has lately been completed, is occupied. H. Y. Miller, butcher, has built near his old home in McDermott. Hardware's new building is to be started next month. A new brick two-story building will be started right away to replace the Star Restaurant, which was burnt out last winter. This building will cost $4,000.

The Tennis Club are very active preparing the tennis court. All hands have been working hard.

The C.P.R. section have been increased and are busy repairing the track at the west end.

The river is still intact, but water appears to be coming from the Clearwater, and the ice is expected to break up soon.

All hands are busy cleaning up in an effort to have a clean village by May 1st.

All work in the bush around the various logging and lumber camps has ceased, and the saws are busy making lumber.

Mr. and Mrs. F. Hough have returned from Nordberg, where Mr. Hough has been working in the mines.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Hansen have returned from their season's trapping, and report a good season.

A good boxing carnival was held at the Oddfellows Hall on Friday, evening, April 20th. Professor Harry Davies had a very good programme. There were over two hours of boxing. He boxed with his juvenile pupil first, and then paired them off to box together. Some of these boys had received two seasons' training and were very clever in the fight art. Young boy his age and weight in Alberta. George Wyatt is open to take on any of the Vivian and Badger fight proved very exciting, lasting four rounds, which were all fast and furious; both men were intent on a knockout. George Vivian showed very clever in his boxing, while Badger was clean and open, and he was unable to protect himself. Considerable comment was aroused when Mr. O. J. Edwards gave his decision as a draw. The last bout was between Prof. Harry Davies and Mr. Van Carlson, accountant of the Imperial Bank. This was a 3-round bout and proved very interesting. Although the banker had the advantage in height and reach, he was no match for Battling Harry. The third round was fast and furious, and wound up in a win for Harry.

The dancing, like the boxing, was a huge success, and the music by Mrs. Peterson, piano, Mr. Nelson, violin, Mr. Stewart, side drum etc., was very good and lasted till 3.15 a.m. Supper was served to all by Mrs. H. Davies and the Ladies' Aid.

Mr. Cory, the new grocer, who is located in the McDermott hardware store, will soon have to find new quarters owing to the increase in his business. He is figuring on building a 3-storey brick veneer building near the post office.

ADDRESS ON GARDENING

The following excellent address by Mrs. E. Bone was given last week at the request of friends in Poplar Ridge. "Gardening," as Mrs. Bone is known far and wide to be one of the most successful gardeners in the district, but it would take too much time to read with a great deal of interest by readers of The News.

Red Deer, Alta., April 16th, 1923. Ladies of the U.F.W.A. Local, Poplar Ridge, and also to all other friends I will endeavor to give you the address which you asked for at our last U.F.W.A. meeting, how to grow small fruit and garden vegetables, and feeling competent to do so after twenty-one years of experience right here in Poplar Ridge.

"We grow fruit on a very large scale in Eastern Canada, but when I came here it was quite a different matter in fact quite different to what it is today, and I believe I was the first to grow butter beans out here twenty years ago, and in 1910 grew my first crop of tomatoes, and now I will tell you I succeeded to well with my garden."

For thirty-eight years I have used William Lawton seeds, as they are the best that I know of, and about the 16th of March, I got shallow boxes made and sowed tomato, celery, cabbage and cauliflower seeds. Then I lay wet sacks on the boxes and kept them damp until the seeds are up. Then I take the sacks away, only the celery I transplant every two weeks. After that let me tell you the garden ready, that is, I make straight rows 3 feet and 6 inches apart, then sow the seeds, strike the peck, then the lettuce, then the onion sets, radishes, then all onion seeds, then turnips, then the cucumbers, then the carrots and beans after that the herbs, marrows, and melons, then I leave space for the tomatoes, cabbages, and pumpkins, as I like my garden to look as good as a nice garden. When the seeds are up I pass the hoe on each side of the rows which takes a very little time, and then I pass the cultivator between the rows; three times during the summer will be sufficient. I never leave any weeds lying in the garden anywhere after they are pulled up, and I take a little care over them, and about a little over now about the cabbages and tomatoes—I take the soil and make a hole about eight inches deep, and pour two cups of water into it, then put in the plants; then put them close loosely around it, and cover it with some empty tin cans and leave it so for five days; then take the tin for more plants, and you need not water the plants any more after that. If a frost comes in the spring I cover the cucumbers and the vegetable marrows only, and the same in the fall. Once or twice last year I did not do this, and the pumpkins and found it was just as good not covered at all. I put manure on the garden every year. I had fourteen rows of potatoes, and sold one and a half tons of cabbages, 121 cauliflowers, and 100 marrow, 16 bushels of tomatoes, and about 6 bushels of cucumbers, water melons which weighed 10 pounds, pumpkins 6½ pounds, cucumbers 16 inches long, tomatoes 12 inches long, and all the other vegetables. I had about 30 white partridge onions, 25 gallons of pickles in 9 different kinds. I cannot do things too numerous to mention here. I bring in the cabbages about the 1st of July, and in the middle of the garden, not far from the gate, are all my flowers, in which I have a great deal of all. Now about the celery: I plant it in trenches and water it, also the cucumbers. It is done in this way: I make a trench about 1 foot wide when they are to their full size and have a glossy whitish tint, then I break them off and put them in boxes in a room upstairs and in no time are ripe, as doing this way the rest of the fruit grows quicker and better I find, although they ripen quite well on the bush but will not bear so much fruit. I never sowed seeds as to when I sow my garden seeds. I sow just when I am able, some gardeners take notice of the signs of the moon, but I never do. I will be pleased to help anyone if they will only ask me, in the lines of vegetables or fruit, as I never could see how a garden can be a failure out this way, as with it all I have made a very good living out of it the last four years, as depending on nothing else, could give more definite explanation, but it would take too much time to believe, and now as I will first mention the rhubarb, of which I have 600 plants, and sold 2300 pounds of it last year, and I would not advise anyone to start a fruit garden unless there is a good net wire fence around it, and as to the planting I first plant each row 6 feet apart, and leave three feet wide for the raspberries, and drive two inch posts on each side and stick on two plain wires on each side so as not to break the bushes when picking the fruit off them. I never sow seeds to grow and cultivate with horse cultivator the same as garden vegetables. As I have both wild and garden raspberries, I will say that both bear equally well, once you grow them you never would like to get rid of them, and my name goes wherever they plant one that has no thorns on it, as they are not worth while cultivating. Twenty-one years ago I transplanted 60 small wild gooseberry bushes and at the end of two years picked 400 gallons of them, the year following I picked 29 gallons, and the next year, which was the fourth, I picked 51 gallons, the fruit being quite large, and if made into jelly while the fruit is still green makes some of the best jelly on the market. The black currants I put wet ashes around the bushes 6 inches away from each bush. It makes larger fruit; also the red currants, sprinkling with parts green will destroy all insects, which, by the way, should be done while the leaves are merely coming out before it blossoms. Watch the garden after the first frost comes on, and pruning should be done the first week of April, and I believe a good many necessary for this work. I will mention to you that I made 22 different kinds of preserves in the line of jam, jellies, canned whole, or stewed in sealers, all made from fruit which I grow myself, and which has been pronounced most delicious by many a one who has tasted them, and will tell you that I grow most of my own seeds now, for which it says a most commendatory good thing for this country. In fact, this part of Alberta is getting better all the time, I notice, for some kind of vegetables and small fruit. I am of the opinion that apples would grow right now if an edge or stump were in the meeting today. If I have, it is in the hope of helping others. Thanking you all, ladies, for the kind attention you have given to my address.

MRS. E. BONE.

ENGLAND GETTING ALL SHIPBUILDING

Montreal, April 27.—England is ousting Canadian shipbuilding companies from their own market, owing to a big variation amounting to 40 per cent in the costs of production. The result is that there will not be much shipbuilding in Canada, for some time.

These are the conclusions formed by A. R. Gillman, managing director of Canadian Vickers, Ltd., just returned from a business trip to England. "As regards shipbuilding overseas," he said, "there are signs of moderate improvement. Today, Great Britain is building about 20 ships for the Canadian Great Lakes at figures which it has been impossible for the Canadian shipbuilder to approach, largely brought about by the fact that the skilled mechanic in England is getting approximately half what is paid to the same laborer on this side."

ADDITIONAL ATTRACTION TO THE NIPIGON

If you could get a better buck than the one above, how far would you go to get him? The camera man got this one in the Nipigon district of Ontario, and it showed a great deal of interest in the rest of the party. Usually, however, they are not so approachable, and to get close enough to shoot is more or less of an achievement. The picture is therefore remarkable for this if for no other reason.

The Nipigon has only of recent years come into its own as a hunting and fishing country, but for centuries Indians and Whites have hunted and fished along its trails.

Camping on the Nipigon river-side, it holds the record of being the most perfect and prolific breeding place in the world for large red and speckled trout. That Indians are said to have piled them up frozen like cordwood, and the great number taken by anglers each year are facts which warrant the belief that the supply is inexhaustible. Moose and bear are found in large numbers, and big game in this district has increased of late years because for some reason or other the animals are driving farther south. Fishing is good any time between May and September, and exceptionally so toward the end of the season when the weather gets cooler.

Each year, the Nipigon attracts more sportsmen and many who go in search of health as much as game. Up to the present, however, the number has been confined to those who are satisfied or able to live in tents and "go it," so the building of a better Bungalow Camp will prove a big attraction. The last year's camp is superb and is a type all its own, for nowhere else can one find such a blending of green and brown in foliage or such beautifully wooded waters. In later years, when its wealth of mineral Lac is exploited, much of this will be destroyed, but at present it stands as one of the most "worth-while" visiting countries in the world.
